

Muscle Shoals Power Will Be In Use by 1926

Work on Huge Project Is Resumed Quickly as U. S. Gives Word to Army Engineers to Complete Job

$7,400,000 More Needed

Gigantic Dam and Other Sections of Construction to Furnish Task for 2,000

FLORENCE, Ala., Nov. 4.—The roar of construction work on the great Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals again is sounding through the valleys and over the hills along the Tennessee River. The Federal government has stepped in to rescue from possible decay the spectacular wartime nitrate and power projects, which sprang up almost overnight, involved in the building of what will be the world's largest water-power dam.

United States army engineers, who have just been furnished with $8,100,000 in Congressional appropriations, are once more proceeding with the work of harnessing the mighty waters of the Tennessee under a government program which provides for the completion of the Wilson Dam, the installation of machinery and the furnishing of electrical "juice" by the late winter of 1925 or the early spring of 1926.

This program is so definite that the army appropriation bill to be introduced in Congress December 4 is to contain an item making available $7,500,000 additional for the work for the fiscal year 1923-24. They will require but $7,400,000 more after that, for the following fiscal year, before they have a finished job at the dam and powerhouse, and be ready to turn the switches that send out the electrical current.

To the army engineer dam builder it makes no difference whether nitrates are made here; whether fertilizer is made here; whether the Tennessee River is to move the street cars in distant New Orleans; whether it drains the swamps of Florida with cheap power. He does not concern himself with the question of whether a woman with an up-to-date electric hair-curling iron in Mobile is to benefit, nor whether the farmer in Mississippi, Tennessee and Alabama is to light his premises, pump his water, or drive his machinery with the electrical energy which is to come from the harnessing of the waters now to be brought under the guiding hand of man. Questions such as whether Chattanooga, Memphis, Pensacola or other communities are to use the electrical energy from the Tennessee finally for cheap power for manufacturing purposes are questions which give the army engineer dam builder no concern whatever.

Building Project Halted

All these army dam builders have known or cared is that they have been in their work since April 15, 1921, by lack of money, when the dam was one third completed, at which time the air began to be filled with the roar, not of dam building, but of who should finally use the dam.

The armistice had come. Appropriations had dribbled for a while, then completely stopped. Armed sentries faded from the picture of the great work. The dam builders were obliged to turn their backs on their war-time picture of furnishing nitrate for explosives for the army in France by means of the water power of the Tennessee, which had called into being the plans for the dam. For a time it seemed as if the great dam were asleep.

But now an awakening has come and at the hands of the same men the army engineers. Their picture now is one of peace, with about 1,200 men actually working on the dam to-day, soon 2,000 to be swarming over the works, and the call going out for a small group of able assistant civilian engineers.

The music of the noisy rock-crushers, the toot-toot of the locomotives hauling sand and gravel, and the pleasant control-bells of the boats towing barges in the river, are making a harmony of peace-time efficiency, under which the army dam builders expect to carry out their program of a finished job not later than the spring of 1926 with hardly ever more men at work at one time than 2,000 to do the work which 4,000 at a time were required to do under war time conditions.

Sheffield, Tusculum, and Florence had large populations for cities like these, during the war. Sheffield alone had 40,000 residents while the nitrate plants were being built. Men slept in tents in the city streets and were glad of any sort of a chance to rest. To-day, Sheffield is presumed to have a population of about 8,000. During the war, Florence housed 25,000 people. To-day this city houses about 15,000. Tusculum has been reduced accordingly in size. In war days the government had a payroll of 55,000 men housed in and around these three cities.

The men at work to-day are being paid at the base rate of $2.50 per day, but, as this is a government payroll, and Congress has granted a bonus to government workers, they actually receive about $3.20 per man per day average. This means an expenditure of about $4,000 per day for labor. But cement, lumber, coal, re-inforcing steel, and other materials are being purchased, eating into the appropriations.

Machinery Has Been Bought

All the big machinery for the electrical power installations was bought long ago. This big machinery, technically described as four units, each consisting of 30,000 horse-power turbines, capable of generating all together 120,000 horse-power, is on the ground ready to be installed. So far as construction machinery is concerned, there is equipment of that character on the dam works which has been inventoried at $5,000,000, and thereafter nothing in that line, with the one exception of a tow-bus, has been needed, and that has just been bought.

Colonel W. J. Barden, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, is in charge of the dam builders. He has been able to retain during the idle period a small nucleus of the civilian engineering force and is now searching for a few more high-class engineers, but is unable to locate them, probably for the reason that the government does not pay very high salaries to skilled technical men.

The work of building the dam, under Colonel Barden, is divided into two parts. One consists of control of the dam proper, which is a little more than half the distance across the river, and is known as Construction Division No. 1. Lieut. Col. W. C. Weeks, United States Engineers, is in charge of that, and is also in charge of the engineering staff of the office. The other part consists of Construction Division No. 2, which includes the work of the powerhouse, and that is in charge of Major John S. Butler, United States Engineers. Captain Ralph Mills, United States Engineers, has just been added to the staff, and he is in charge of accounting and disbursing.

Winter Work To Be Pushed

The work will go on all through the winter, under the program, because there usually is no ice worth speaking of in the Tennessee. In 1917 and 1918 there was something in the nature of an ice-jam at Muscle Shoals, but as a rule the winters are open. Aside from the weather questions, however, the dam builders are finding a problem in the supply of concrete aggregate, to use a technical term, consisting of sand and gravel. This is obtained by dredging in the river, nine miles below Florence. It must be placed on barges, and towed up to the dock at Florence. During low water the channel is not deep enough to permit of bringing up filled barges.

But this problem, like all others, is being conquered, and the dam builders expect to finish the foundation work in the north channel by January 1, 1924. They expect to close the openings under the dam and create the "pool" by January 1, 1925, or not later than the spring of that year. This "pool," as engineers modestly describe it, will in reality be a beautiful lake eighteen miles long, formed by the water backed up by the dam. Finally, they expect to install the electrical machinery, and have electrical current read, during the late winter of 1925 or the early spring of 1926.

The construction plant, coffer dams, and temporary structures were depreciating at the rate of approximately $400,000 a year, until $5,100,000 became available at the hands of Congress in September and on October 1. All that deterioration has been stopped, new work has begun, and the army engineer dam builders are singing the song of peace. If they were naval officers they would probably describe themselves as being "equipped with chart and sailing directions and proceeding full speed ahead."
